No. 247.

WEDNESDAY, January 17, 1750.

LEGHORN, September 8.

WE have advice from Corsica, that two deputies from the malecontents having waited on M. de Cursay, in the neighbourhood of Bastia, in order to fix the time of holding the congress at this place, as formerly mention'd; the French general told them, that he had received orders from the king his master, not to meet them at Leghorn, but at Massa Carara. This answer so much displeased the chiefs, that they told him plainly, they would not go there.

Sept. 10. We are well assured, that the republic of Genoa, having requested from France an additional supply of forces to those already in Corsica, to the amount of 8000 men; the British court being inform'd thereof, have represented, by their minister at Paris, the ill consequences of such a scheme, as it may embroil Italy in fresh troubles.

Sept. 12. The master of a Danish vessel, who arrived yesterday from Alicant, brings advice, that as he was coming out of that port, he met the English squadron under the command of Mr. Keppel, reinforced by two firesh ips, steering for Algiers.

Vienna, Sept. 20. On Monday last the states of Lower Austria assembled, and the empress queen made a speech from the throne, wherein her Imperial majesty solemnly confirmed all the privileges of the states; and declared that she had no new subsidy of any kind to demand, being quite satisfied with those which the states had formerly given for ten years.

Madrid, Sept. 15. The letters from Alicant, of the 10th instant mention, that the two Spanish men of war, and the two xebeques, were returned to Carthagena from sounding the bay of Algiers, which they were two days performing under Dutch colours; but that when they had finished, they fired a gun and hoisted Spanish ensigns: That it was believed the ships and xebeques would be disarmed, as the bomb-ketches were already laid up.

It is wrote from Cadiz, that a vessel arrived there the 7th instant from Vera Cruz, and last from the Havanna, in sixty days, with advice, that the two men of war at Vera Cruz were to sail in the month of June with five millions of dollars; that two others were arrived at Carthagena; and that the said four men of war may be expected in Europe about the end of next month.

From the Paris A la main, September 22.

By letters from Genoa of the 11th instant, we are credibly inform'd, that there are such tumults and commotions amongst the populace of that city, on account of the bank of St. George, that 'tis much to be feared, that nothing less will be the consequence than a new revolt.

Last week several bills or papers were posted up in the corners of almost every street; and even cartels, or a kind of challenges, which were very bold and audacious, and full of invectives against the government, whereby they intimate what is expected to be done; and enjoin all their fellow citizens and others to keep up arms, on this forfeit of their lives; threatening farther to plunder the effects of all such as shall decline to be aiding and assisting them in their designs.

On the night following several other cartels of the like rebellious nature were stuck up, but the authors cannot as yet be produced, notwithstanding the strictest search has been made, in order to find out the ringleaders of such a dangerous commotion.

As the nobility are greatly divided amongst themselves, it is greatly to be feared, that these tumults are fomented by the disaffected parties.

Stockholm, Sept. 18. The directors or superintendants of the trade and commerce of this kingdom, having for some years last past used their utmost endeavours to render their negotiations to the East Indies as flourishing as possible, are determined to extend their views, and do all that in their power lies, in conjunction with France, to carry it even into America.

Amsterdam, October 2. A deputy from their high mightinesses assisted at the court of directors of the West India company held this day, in order to deliberate upon the method which must be made use of, for presenting to his serene highness the prince stadtholder the diploma of governor general of the West Indies, and of the colonies thereon dependent; as also upon the dividend which is proper to be made upon the actions of the said company.

Extract of a Letter from Hamburgh, Sept. 15.

"The late frequent conferences of Mr. Tidey with the ministers of Denmark, turned on the project of the English to establish a fishery in the Croudack [Orkney] isles, and particularly Schetland. The court of Denmark pretends, that the English have no right of navigation in those seas, to the exclusion of the subjects of Denmark; but that on the contrary, these last possess that exclusive right, seeing these isles belong properly to the kingdom of Norway.

Extract of a Letter from Naples, August 30.

"For some days past we have been in a continual alarm at the news, that a squadron of eleven Algerine xebeques was cruizing within a league of this capital, of which the commandant's vessel was of 40 guns and 500 men, four of 30 guns and about 350 men, and the six others from 18 to 24 guns and at least 250 men; which squadron was not supposed to be come into these seas, without a design of executing some great project: And we learn by an English capsale, who arrived here last Monday from Tunis, that having been met by the chief of the said squadron, named Agi Mousta (and who formerly belonged to our galleys), and detained by him two entire days, he had, during that time, discover'd that the corsairs intended to attempt some enterprize of eclat, and that the commandant, with his vessel only, had been in the night to reconnoitre the island of Procida, in order to know whether the king was, or would be there, to take the diversion of hunting pheasants, as his majesty is accustomed to do in this season. The arrival of this corsair in our seas has occasioned such an alarm, that for three days the inhabitants have abstained from going to take the fresh air on the sea coast, which is so agreeable at this time, for fear of being surprized by the Algerines. The government has taken divers precautions on this head, having sent detachments of troops into the castles and small neighbouring isles, and reinforced all the posts. Many light vessels have been sent out to watch their motions, and as they have not been seen for these two days, 'tis supposed the Barbarians have retired: Tho' many think, that as the weather will probably continue favourable a month longer in these parts, Agi Mousta will defer his retreat to Algiers, and, for want of better employment, amuse himself with taking on the coasts of this kingdom, and Sicily, all the merchant ships which fall in his way.

Extract of a Letter from the Hague, Sept. 25.

"Baron d'Aylva, appointed by their high mightinesses envoy extraordinary to the court of Sweden, after having been 3 months preparing for his departure, has now put off his journey sine die, which occasions various speculations with respect to the affairs of the North, in which there is great likelihood that their high mightinesses will avoid taking any part, as far as is possible, the present system of the republic being only to concern themselves about their domestic interests, 'till such time as they are in a more flourishing condition, and that the rather, they not being able to give a helping hand, as they have heretofore done, towards maintaining that ballance of power which has cost them so much blood and treasure, since the placing king William III. of glorious memory, upon the throne of Great Britain. So long as the republic forbears to send a minister to Stockholm, he will not be embarrassed by being drawn into treaties which are negotiating on all hands; and 'tis for that reason M. Van Harp has been told he may put off his journey for some time, perhaps it may not take place at all. If it be true that count Bentinck will be absent five or six months. But this is a secret which will not immediately, with any certainty, be unravell'd. Notwithstanding all the pains taken by the prince stadtholder, he cannot as yet restore the condition of the republic to that power and figure they were in both before and since the peace of Utrecht.

The deposed magistrates continue to have great influence over the public affairs, as the government of which are many of their relations, friends and creatures, to whom they were great benefactors during the time they were in power. They have weight enough either to divide the assembly of the states of particular provinces, or that of the states general: by which they are so much embroiled, that many things which have been near a twelvemonth under consideration remain undetermined.

The provinces were debolent in the payment of their respective quotas into the public treasury, at the time of the elevation of his serene highness to the stadtholdership, and they continue still to be in arrear, so that the council of state is unable to supply the military chest, insomuch that there are fifteen or eighteen months pay due to many of the regiments. 'Tis impossible, under our present circumstances, even to think of repairing the fortifications, much less to fill the magazines with necessary provisions and stores.

A short ESSAY on GAMING.

WE shall not here consider the actions of men, as they are the children of divine providence, but only take a cursory view of the power and activity of human reason, in the quick apprehension and laying hold of proper opportunities, in order to discover how far outward circumstances may conduce to the raising a man's fortune: In the framing of which, we must take care to provide proper materials, before we begin to erect the structure. If we do not first prove the goodness and intrinsic worth of our design, upon the touchstone of wisdom and prudence; if we do not conceive honest intentions and noble ends, all our endeavours will be vain and fruitless; we shall only build a Babel of confusion, a lasting monument of our own ignorance and indiscretion. For there is as much difference between action and meditation, as between dreams and things really perform'd; the one has only the appearance of things communicated to their understanding; the other has the knowledge of every particular, by the guide of experience. Hence, therefore, it is evident, that to act without prudent forecast, or premeditation, is to throw ourselves entirely upon chances; and, as it were, to jump into the river with our eyes open, regardless of the eventual danger, and not so much as looking out to see if any boat lies near, to come to our assistance.

Now, among all the follies and vices of the age we live in, there is not one which shews the want of this discretion so much, as to venture our substenance upon the turn of a card, or the chance of a dye; which, it is next to an impossibility to foresee, without being guilty of fraud, or delusion, and running the hazard of a goal, or of the pillory. Nor is there any practice more detrimental to society, more prejudicial to trade and business, or productive of more pernicious consequences, than the itch of gaming: for, how can it be imagin'd, that a person who is infected with this malady, should have the least regard for the welfare of the community, when his heart is bent upon plunder, his eyes is blinded by the insatiate lust of avarice, and all his thoughts and desires terminate in that one object? This goads him on to corrupt the innocent, to shuffle the unwary, to forfeit his word, and absolutely to disavow his conscience; hoping, by these fatal means, to be able to rifle the pockets of his companions, to enrich himself with the spoil, and to indulge his sensual appetite.

We are not ignorant, that some who have run headlong into this error, are apt to plead, in abatement of their own guilt, the vain hopes of advancing their fortune, or making a short cut to the abundance of riches; but, like the dog in the fable, by catching at the shadow, they have lost the substance. How much more prudent had they been to have enjoy'd the [illegible] Antisthenes reprehends this immature access of wealth: An honest estate, says he, may be gotten hastily, at the beginning, but the end thereof shall not be blessed. Some again, grow desperate by continual losses, and reduced to extream want and poverty, have turned from gaming to thieving, for the immediate support of themselves and their families; till at length detected, and condemned to exile or the gibbet, they have received the just reward of their villainy.

In short, gaming table is the school of iniquity, where all the vices of the age are taught and practis'd; the temple of Lucifer, in which immorality and prophaneness, drunkenness and debauchery, cheating and pride, rapine and murder, have their place of residence; not can any man enter, without great danger of infection. But, what is still worse, the distemper is of such a malignant nature, that whoever has the misfortune to catch it, remains incurable, for there is not one in a thousand that ever recovers. Age and experience, time and reflection, have in some cases reform'd numbers, and turn'd them off from their favourite vice. The debauchee, who has long associated in the services of Bacchus and Venus, is very apt, on retrospection to censure his past conduct, and will often retire to repent of his folly; but the gamester's pain increases his malady, age adds to his avarice, and though often fitted and cheated, he continues to follow the fickle goddess. Fortune, till being old, he continues to follow the fickle goddess. Fortune, till being old, he continues to follow the fickle goddess. Fortune, till being old
